Second Week - 2-6 June 1969

STRUCTURE OF THE CLANDESTINE SERVICE

The Clandestine Service has undergone a gradual evolution and one or more extensive reorganizations since its inception. Whether its current structure is best suited to accomplish its present-day objectives is a question that merits careful study at this time, as well as periodic scrutiny in the future. The Seminar will: review the historical development of CS composition, examine its current Headquarters and, as appropriate, overseas structure; examine CS organization and structure as it affects current working relationships with other Agency Directorates and members of the Intelligence Community; attempt to determine whether the CS is now properly organized to accomplish its mission most effectively; and, if indicated, offer suggestions for changes.

After the 5 February meeting with Tom K., [] asked me to draft a memorandum for Tom's signature. The attached has been carefully drafted to inform pertinent CS elements of the revised nature and scope of the Seminar. Also, I believe, it has been formulated in a fashion which will evoke positive and willing cooperation from the Divisions. Their views are nicely reflected while, at the same time, the DDP's initial concept and purposes (as well as his interest and support) remain firmly intact.
